INDEPENDENCE DAY: 1931

The 155th anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence should find the spirit of that inalienable document enhanced. Each passing year should lend more to the substance of the noble dream of political equality and freedom the nation's fathers resolved as their guiding ideal.

It would be a most fitting observance of this, the most significant national holiday, to reflect on the content of the Declaration, particularly the enumeration of those infringements on human rights which the colonies resented and sought to right by creating a nation founded squarely on Democratic idealism. Upon the complete divorce from any repetition of those infringements rests, in large part, the absolute success of Republican government in the United States.

The original enumeration of grievances specifically named "the present King of Great Britain," George III, but similar trespass on the rights of United States citizens are equally as repugnant when made in the name of representative government.

Four paragraphs of "the causes" which impelled the representatives of the original colonies to take the daring step of separation are of special interest:

He has refused his assent to laws the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

He has made judges dependent on his will alone, for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people, and eat out their substance.

He has combined, with others, to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution, and unacknowledged by our laws; giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation: . . . For protecting them, by a mock trial, from punishment, for any murders which they should commit on the inhabitants of these states.

Americans have reason to suspect that these infringements on their "rights," as proclaimed in the assertive portion of the declaration, are still tolerated on occasion, in the name of a government that was to be free from them. Legislative bodies sometimes take on the semblance of impersonal tyrants, refusing their assent "to laws the most wholesome and necessary for the public good." Judges have been shown to be mercenary on occasion. "Multitudes of new offices" have been created. Perpetrators of crime have been able to hoodwink society behind the protecting screen of trials that were mockeries of justice.

These things have been recorded and resented, in a vigorous spirit of determination to purge society of their stain as completely as possible. In that constant desire to maintain and improve the letter the spirit of the Declaration of Independence lies sufficient assurance that Americans are not in any way forgetful or unappreciative of the sound heritage left them by the far-sighted signers of the act by which the 13 original colonies broke their colonial allegiance to Great Britain.

Many a statistician has offered a maze of figures and charts to prove that in the year 1884 or 2325 the entire productive land area of the world will be occupied, and that humanity will be up against it to produce enough to feed the billions of persons, now multiplying swiftly as the ravages of disease are con-

But the two wise statisticians did not reckon with a generous Providence which shapes men's ends and also provides their lands. Only a few days ago the appearance of two new islands in the mid-Atlantic, between Brazil and Africa, was reported authoritatively. Being close by the St. Paul's island group, they lend color to the belief that a lost continent is emerging, slowly, to be sure, but with a high promise of new land for the nation which first plants its flag on Atlantis, or whatever the still submerged continent may be called.

Unhappily, Providence acts even more slowly than legislatures in providing for the supposed needs of mankind, and it would be premature certainly to count on any immediate relief in this direction. So if you are offered a superior home site on an Atlantis subdivision, it might be best to risk your money on real estate already above sea level—unless, indeed, you are sure of an exceedingly long life or expect to provide farms for a bevy of great-grandchildren. — Cincinnati Enquirer.

Twenty Years Ago

(Issue of July 3, 1911)

Coming as a relief to heat sufferers, but spreading destruction in its path, a miniature tornado tore through the country about three miles south of here, Tuesday afternoon. Trees were uprooted, barns blown down and fields of corn laid low.

The eve of the Fourth of July was one of the noisiest Salem people have experienced for several years. Nine young men were arrested for shooting toy canons.

For Saturday, July 4

Notable Nativity: Calvin Coolidge.

The planetary configurations holding rule on this day may not be interrupted as propitious. There are several signs of confusion, setback, disappointments and either commotion, accidents or physical disturbance. There are also presages of duplicity, treachery and possibly misrepresentation or subtle attack through letters or writings. New undertakings should be postponed and every care taken to preclude regret or sorrow.

Those whose birthday it is are confronted by a year calling for much discretion and prudence in the management of their affairs. These seem to be subject to duplicity, fraud, slander and misrepresentation or attack through writings or contracts. There should be precaution against personal violence, accident or physical disturbance. Sorrow and regret have elements of the subtle and sinister. A child born on this day should be quick-witted, imaginative, romantic and subtle and should receive a sound training in principle and integrity.

NEW YORK Day by Day

by O.O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, July 3.—Thoughts while strolling: Tallulah Bankhead has changed. Not so flapperish. Cabaret sign: "Pop in and show your morbidity." Mrs. Frank V. S'orris signed Pocahontas. Soundso who reply to a sweeping bow with a still little not. And set you off talking to yourself.

Henry L. Doherty, a Columbus, O. boy, who made good in the city. Modernistic shops flooded with upward-shining electricity. Their marble pillars suggesting birches in the moonlight. Many say Samuel Seabury will be the next Mayor. Summer spats are said colored. That new fashion designer, Schiaparelli, seems to be setting the style pace. Vest pocket shaving kits. Newsies who cry "Hy're papers!" Burns Mantle and his daughter. Stores with cork and rubber flooring. Anything to deaden the city's scuff-scuff. What did they call dumbbells in the Gay 90's?

Even the Flea Circus and shooting gallery next door merged. Wonder how a columbian could merge. The old Republic, where Warfield triumphed, not continuous burlesque. The graying Don Marquis. Cold cream smells to me as though it would be good to eat. Dave Leonard looks like Geo. Jean Nathan.

Venerable stage doormen tipping back in chairs. They say Harlem is to have a tabloid. A man who once fired me trips awkwardly off a bus and loses his hat. Says he, screamingly merrily. What happened to all "The 400 bond salesmen?" Nothing looks so snooty as a plunging locomotive.

Pink-somached puppies asleep, feet up in a dog shop window. Tom Noonan of the Chinatown missions. B. A. Rolfe resembles a banker in my home town. I can't keep from frowning with melting tallow in those candle-lit tea rooms. Freda Hempel. She likes to visit fortune tellers, they say.

Marshmallows in pink, blue and yellow. Eva Le Gallienne suggests a war dream. And somehow I've longed to poke John D. Jr. lightly in the ribs and inquire: "How goes it, old top?" After all big shots must be fed up with constant deference.

Jeff Machamer tells of a customer entering the very British Fortnum and Mason store on Upper Madison and asking for powder. "Which kind, madam?" the "clerk" inquired: "Face, gun, tooth or bug?"

The artist, Ralph Barton, drifting out with the shadowy tide, created a distinct void in the ultra Bohemian life of the town. Talented and loving life, which he had lived to the fullest, his suicide was a distinct shock. I remember him best in the residence he established in the rue Nicolet in Paris a short while ago. Here with his beautiful and accomplished French bride he seemed to have reached a pinnacle of happiness. Yet before that summer waned into the cool of Autumn, he was stricken by a sudden discontent. At first a pronounced Francophile he was becoming annoyed by the petty trials of French domesticity. One day on an hours notice he was sailing for America.

A remembered feature of Barton's Paris quarters was his bedroom, completely swathed in jet black. Tortured by insomnia, he took this method of wooing sleep. The walls, the ceiling, the floor and every article in the room were of the same sombre hue. The only relief was in the ceiling where by touching a switch at the bedside would glow a splatter of electric stars.

Barton had a home-made motion picture which is today probably worth a fortune. Every visitor to his rue Nicolet home was included and was forced to carry out another scene in mock continuity. Among notables featured with arrant fondness when I saw it were Charles Chaplin, Henry L. Mencken, Sinclair Lewis, Sacha Guitry and wife, Paul Robeson, the Prince of Wales, Anita Loos, John Emerson and many others.

The jaunty suicide note I ever read was that of a Broadway, weary chorus girl who left this note for her room-mate in a shabby hotel and turned on the gas: "Over the river! If there's anything on the other side, I'll be seeing you."

I was pitchforked today into one of those sudden sidewalk pickpocket dramas. A man ahead of me clutched at a hip pocket and yelled "Thief!" And then reaching into an inside coat pocket cried: "No, here it is!" Being directly behind him I dashed into a store before he changed his mind again.

Precautions in Baby Feedings

Recently I wrote of the importance of natural feeding of the infant by the mother. Today I want to tell you of certain precautions necessary.

For the first few days the nursing of the baby is, indeed, a tiresome and difficult undertaking. The child, as well as the mother, must become accustomed to the procedure.

The first day the child should be fed every six hours. On the second day, once in every four hours is in usual practice. During this period the fluid contains more "colostrum" than milk.

Colostrum is found right after the baby is born. It serves as a cleansing agent for the infant's digestive tract. It prepares the stomach to digest the milk.

Never feed the baby sweetened water, catnip tea, milk "pap" or any other preparation during the first few days. The digestive system is not ready for food.

Nature will supply all the nourishment demanded during these trying days. The child may cry, but do not think it is due to hunger or colic. There are a hundred reasons for crying and most authorities believe a certain amount of crying is desirable. It develops the lungs and muscles.

If the infant is unusually large and the crying persists, it may be wise to give a little warm water. The doctor will advise about other feedings.

It is very important to train the infant in regular habits. There must be stated times for the feedings. On the third day the child should be put on a program and for a time seven nursings in twenty-four hours are about right. No more than this should be allowed.

At this age the infant should have at least one long nap of from four to six hours in the twenty-four. With this exception it should be awakened at the regular nursing hours until ten o'clock at night. From this hour until six the next morning it should be awakened only once for a nursing.

Within two to three weeks a healthy infant can be trained to nurse and sleep with perfect regularity. These habits once acquired are of great value to the child and greatly lessen the work of the mother.

After three months it is desirable that the number of nursings be decreased at night. In many cases it is advisable for the infant to go through the night without being disturbed at all. This procedure makes it possible for the mother to continue her nursing for a longer period than if she had nursed the baby more frequently in the beginning.

HOLY TRINITY ENGLISH LUTHERAN
East State st. at Woodland ave.
Rev. George D. Keister, pastor.
Fifth Sunday after Trinity. Sunday school 9:45 (Acts 6:6-14). H. E. Smith, Supt. The Christian church held its birth on the day of Pentecost. Then it was that the Holy Spirit came upon the disciples and they went out to win the world for the Christ. The Holy Spirit is still waiting to be taken and used by the modern church. As He descended upon the waiting disciples so He is willing to fill the lives of the servants of Christ today. One weakness today in the work of the Kingdom is the reliance that man has developed upon his own resources. We are to be reliant upon the powers that God has given us, but some labors in the Kingdom, only the Holy Spirit Himself can do for us.

Morning worship 11. Sermon: "Life's Sure Foundations." A building is only as secure as its foundation. It will only weather the storms and ravages of time as it is firmly set upon a strong and unmovable foundation. This applies so clearly to the life of man. Our lives are to be built upon something that will last. The tests and trials of life come and severely assault the plans and purposes of individuals. Life is filled with disappointments and sorrows and failures that only can be met and heroically dealt with as one's life foundations are secure. He who builds upon the world alone, will soon find that such a foundation will crumble in time. He who builds upon self will find that weakness and insecurity will result. Building a life on God and faith in the Son Jesus Christ, is like building a building upon the bed-rock of the earth. The life that is hid with Christ in God shall not be moved.

SECRET PLACES

By Joan Sutherland

Synopsis of Preceding Installments: Feodor Staire, attached to the British Embassy in Paris, was unmarried, and was being by the modern young girl. On his 30th birthday he was on the Calais train, bound for London, when he met his old friend, Ronald Hallett, who seven months before had married the beautiful Greta Wareham, daughter of Lady Alice Wareham, who lived in Paris. Ronald mentioned his sister-in-law, Toni, but Staire was not interested. Then he was attracted to her when he saw her rescue a little pet dog from beneath a limousine in London, and later when he saw her riding. Soon after her return to Paris, she went on a visit to the United States. In the meantime, Greta had met the Comte Henri D'Arblaye, who although received in the American colony in Paris, did not bear a very good reputation. Toni, about 21, was a thoroughly modern, met Staire on her return, at a dinner party given in a Paris restaurant. Greta had told Ronald she had a headache and did not wish to go but Toni met her unexpectedly in the cloakroom. Greta told her she had come with D'Arblaye. Toni, who considered herself hard-boiled, danced with Feodor and was instantly attracted to him. They danced again and Staire made an engagement for luncheon the next day in the country. They were engaged when they returned in the evening.

Between Toni and Greta there had been an added coldness during the week following the younger sister's engagement to Staire. Greta was never a great friend of hers—never had been. She was a good deal older than Toni; she was of an entirely different temperament; and deep in her heart now she was desperately, furiously jealous. She had been fond of Ronald; no woman could have been otherwise; he was considerate, kind, and loved her very faithfully. To many women, too, he was extremely attractive, but Greta was of the type that could never remain faithful, at least in mind, and she was already tired and sick to death of her husband. She desired new experiences, and she had made up her mind that her next conquest, though she did not express it to herself quite so bluntly, should be Feodor Staire. The fact that Feodor Staire, who had the reputation of being very aloof with women, despite the attraction he had for them, and the respect he paid to them, should actually have fallen in love—and fallen in love with her younger sister—whom she affected to despise as a raw girl, stung her very deeply.

She had her affairs—the one with D'Arblaye in particular, which was already becoming at times a little inconvenient and tiresome. She doubted if she would have kept it up except for the opposition it had aroused, and D'Arblaye's great wealth, which enabled her to have a very good time, for his personality more than once had offended her, as did his manner. He had a way of treating her as if he considered she was his property; and Greta, far too independent and far too selfish ever to be dominated by any man or really to consider his feelings, resented this in no half-hearted way.

On the morning when Toni was scurrying through her dressing, full of delight thinking of the hours ahead, Greta was languid and envious. That Toni, whom she regarded as little more than a child, should have captured such a man as Feodor Staire with his wealth, his social preeminence, and his personality that made him one of the most sought-after men in Paris, infuriated her. She was wretched with jealousy, comparing the relative dullness and obscurity of her own marriage with the brilliant future before her younger sister; the slight to herself, the comments of her acquaintances, she thought that any man could prefer Toni to herself, was a bitter pill for her to swallow, and her temper was at its worst this hot morning. She had spoken snappily to Ronald before he had gone off to his work, had grumbled at her maid, and now, after finishing her toilette, had gone to the telephone. For once she had no engagement for luncheon, and the prospect of her own society appalled her. Something must be done—she wondered what. There was always her mother's apartment, but generally it was full either of young people, so much younger than herself that they bored her to tears, or her mother's friends, failing them it meant a tete-a-tete with Lady Alice, and for that she had no mind. She knew quite well how her mother viewed her flirtation with D'Arblaye. Still, she could not and would not be alone; and going to the telephone she endeavored to make some engagement.

Bad luck awaited her; two of her friends were luncheon out, a third was desolate but she had a sore throat and didn't think it was wise for her to see anybody. Greta hung up the receiver after that, a sneer turning down her lovely mouth. She understood Madeline's sore throats when she had a new and exciting affair only too well.

After that, in desperation, she rang up D'Arblaye and received from him the invitation she knew that would be delighted to give.

"Lunch with me? I only wish you would. Where would you like to go? The Ritz, or is there any other place? Armonville or Pre Catalan? Perhaps you'd motor out with me somewhere?"

At the end of the telephone Greta frowned.

"I hate the country," she said, "just hate it. What could we do, D'Arblaye, out in the country? No, the Ritz, I think."

"Very well—the Ritz at half-past one. I'll get you my special table. And then, perhaps, afterwards—well, we can think of afterwards when we're luncheon. Shall I have a party, or do you want to be just by ourselves?"

Greta was aware he had sounded rather hurt that his suggestion of the country had been so curtly negated, and that would not do.

"Oh, I suppose we shall have to have a party," she said. "Of course, I'd much prefer to be just by ourselves, D'Arblaye, but people are talking a little, you know. No, I think we'd better not. Some wretched friend of Donald's might be there."

"All right," said D'Arblaye's voice along the wire, "I'll fix the party. Au revoir, my dear, till then."

So that was that. Greta hung up the receiver, finished her dressing, looked at the time, saw it was still only a quarter to twelve, and yawning wearily strolled out of the room, ordered her car, and amused herself by glancing down the daily papers until the car came round.

It was a glorious morning, already very hot, and when Greta went downstairs to the street she wondered how long she was going to endure Paris. Ronald could not get away, that she knew, for at least another month. That would bring them to the middle of July. And Paris in July—desolating, impossible! And then she remembered that Madeleine had decided to take the very delightful small Chateau St. Bride, not very far from Lady Alice's house in Brittany, for the summer. It had once belonged to an uncle, and was now let to a wealthy American. She also knew that Madeleine would be perfectly willing to ask anybody Greta herself wanted, so long as he did not interfere with her special affairs of the moment. Why not take advantage of such good luck? And why not arrange that some attractive man should be of the party? Ronald could not object. After all, what harm was she doing? Merely flirting mildly to pass the time.

Perhaps she had better call in at her mother's. It might be just as well to find out what Lady Alice's luncheon engagement was. She had no desire to find herself at the next table to her or to any of her friends, and she knew quite well that if Lady Alice did lunch out, it was usually at the Ritz. So she gave her chauffeur the order. On hearing that her mother was in, she said: "I'll wait. Don't disturb her for a moment," and went into the salon.

There, rather to her surprise, she saw a tall, broad-shouldered figure at the window, who turned round sharply on seeing her, and she came face to face with Feodor Staire. Just for a second he stood quite still on seeing her, then bowed his rather formal bow, and Greta, no longer bored, walked across the room towards him.

"Why, Mr. Staire, how do you do? At least, I suppose I may as well call you Feodor, since you're going to marry Toni. This is the first time I've seen you since your engagement. May I offer you my good wishes?"

She held out her hand, letting her blue eyes meet his in a long, grave look. It was the way Greta usually looked at men when she wished to attach them to herself—a questioning, innocent, wondering look—a look that made them curious to find out just what she knew of life, and whether she were really the icicle she seemed, or capable of warmth and passion beneath that lovely, languid exterior. That look, and the golden notes of her voice, seldom failed, especially when she used the tone she did now, with her lovely rare smile.

"Please come and talk to me. I want to hear all about things. It's so interesting to think you're going to be my brother-in-law. I'd like to be friends."

Friends! Few men would want to be friends with her and she knew it. Therefore, it was so much the best way to suggest right off at the start that no other relation was possible. It made them begin to wonder if they could change her mind. But this man was different. She did not see the response in his manner or the change in his eyes that she was wont to see, and she changed her tactics.

"It's so extraordinary to me," she said, as he sat down beside her where she indicated, "that Toni's going to be married—my little sister Toni! I've always thought of her as a child; she's so adorable, so fresh and young. You'll take care of her, Feodor, won't you?"

He took out a cigarette case, opened it and offered it to her.

"Yes, I intend to do that," he said. "Toni is honoring me by marrying me."

"Honoring you?" Greta looked at him. "That sounds so funny," she said, suddenly smiling; "I can't think of my little sister honoring anybody, but just making them a most delightful pet. It's only because I can't visualize her grown-up. Our baby—she's always been such a darling! But anyway, now I've just got to face it, haven't I? Though we'll miss her terribly. One's always used to having Toni around; she's so very much there, she's so vital."

She saw at once that her only chance with this man at present was to praise Toni, and she was careful now to speak in the sudden, enthusiastic, confidential way that would make him feel she was absolutely genuine.

"I wonder if you know what Ronald's engagements are for tomorrow at lunch time?" he said, ignoring all she had said about Toni. "He phoned me day before yesterday that he had something he wanted to talk to me about. Have you any idea if he is free to-morrow?"

Greta shook her head; once more her eyes were wide open.

"I'm afraid I haven't," she said, regretfully. "Ronald doesn't tell me his engagements very often, he's too busy. But I know he'd be terribly pleased if you could lunch with him. Why don't you ring him up to night?"

"To-night? Isn't he coming to dine with Lady Alice?"

"I think it's rather unlikely as he may be kept late at the office."

What a stupid conversation they were having! For once Greta felt queerly ill at ease with this man. She did not like that slightly mocking light in his eyes as he talked to her. She had a feeling that he had not believed one word she had said about Toni, or even about her own feelings at the engagement; and Greta was not used to experiencing discomfort; she was not used to experiencing anything but admiration and adoration. It made her all the more determined to find out the weak spot in Feodor—to find it out and play upon it; even, if necessary, to detach him from Toni and attach him to herself. She tried another way to interest him.

THE SPIRIT OF 1776

The dreams of our forefathers that this nation might have independence, came true not because of large incomes and ample wealth, but because of that spirit of 1776 that carried these men and boys forward in the face of great adversity.

This year too, the important thing is not to lose our courage and our hope when the battle against the depression is so nearly won, but to plan for the future which will be better and brighter.

GREAT BATTLE LOOMS
NO FAVORITE PICKED

A great battle, one in which a powerful right hand punch will wage warfare against a jabbing and deadly left for heavyweight championship laurels of the world will be waged tonight in the new million-dollar stadium on the shores of Lake Erie in Cleveland. The principals will be Max Schmeling, now in possession of the heavy-weight crown, and an ambitious lad from Macon, Ga., one W. L. ("Young") Stribling.

Those anticipating a $500,000 gate are likely to be disillusioned when the coppers are enumerated after the contest but the thousands who will gather in the stadium will probably witness a contest that will be a really attractive battle. With both contestants already claiming victory and each being in presumably perfect condition, ready to put up a fine exhibition in both fighting and boxing, fans can go wrong only should advance expectations go wrong also and should the showings of the titleholder and challenger in workouts at their respective training camps be misleading.

The powerful right hand punch that subdued Johnny Risko of Cleveland and other pugilists is Schmeling's one and only chance against the clever Stribling. The latter has a peculiar left hand jab to throw into the Fortune Frankfurter's countenance, has a crafty delivery and an almost impervious defense against the Schmeling right. But still the training camp exhibitions can be taken as an indication of one fighter's superiority over the other.

If those battles against unheard-of sparring partners mean anything as far as ring ability is concerned, Schmeling hasn't a chance. His opponents left-handed him continually, outpointed him with jabs that are Stribling's main attack and often had him on the defense.

He seldom used his right; the only time spectators witnessed that powerful mitt in action was in secret workouts when Joe Jacobs was certain no one affiliated with the Stribling camp was in attendance. And those times were sufficient to impress the honored few; it is a right that is to be feared by the best in the game's history.

Stribling, on the other hand, is prepared for the best fight of his career. The reports that scouts brought him from the Schmeling camp have aided his confidence greatly and that means something in winning a fight. For it is no prevarication to say that either the German was putting on a show to mislead Stribling scouts in public training or he is not a heavy-weight champion.

Here are a few things that have been brought to attention of scribes during training camp activities:

Max Schmeling fights flat-footed, is unable to move with any great wariness when he is attacked.

But he has a peculiar type of attack that is all of his own. It somewhat resembled the old Jack Dempsey attack except that Max is upright while the Mannassa Mauler came in crouching.

His right will slaughter Stribling if he is able to use it.

The German's defense against a left has been tried and found wanting. He is depending on his murderous right to bring him the victory.

Stribling's left is almost, if not as good as that of Gene Tunney. It is likely to bother Herr Max to no good end.

Stribling's defense against a right is remarkable.

The Georgian is the more clever of the two but his punches carry less power than Schmeling's.

Above all, Stribling has discarded his old, hanging-on, clinch style of brawling. The Stribling that will fight tonight will be a Stribling that fans have never before seen in action.

Pick your winner if you will from these pointers, jotted down at Clegg Lake and Conneaut Lake with the Max scribe in attendance. Plenty of Salem fans will attend. If the battle is delayed by rain tonight it will be held Saturday at the same hour.

Deans S. Kintner, former Salemite and former News reporter, now director of WHK, is in charge of dedication ceremonies for the new stadium last Sunday.

Tom "Red" Manning, WTAM announcer who told Salem fans tales of training camp activities, is brother of Rev. F. A. J. Manning, former pastor of the St. Paul's Catholic church. Chester L. Smith, another former Salemite, now sports editor of The Pittsburgh Press, was among those present at workouts early in the week.

EASTERN CLUBS RETAIN EDGE IN AMERICAN LOOP

Athletics Win 9, Lose 7; Take Drubbing At Hands of Tribe

By HUGH S. FULLERTON, JR.
Associated Press Sports Writer

At home or away, inter-sectional games in the American league seem to bring about the same result for all the clubs except the St. Louis Browns.

The Browns, who started their home campaign against the eastern invaders in last place, finished it yesterday a good fifth in the standing while the Chicago White Sox dropped from fifth to eighth in the same time. St. Louis won 13 games and lost five while the White Sox had only five victories to 12 defeats.

Edge For East

The rest of the standing remained about the same with the eastern division pulling slowly ahead. The four eastern clubs pulled out a slight margin of victories, winning 34 games and losing 32.

Washington, trouncing the Browns, 13 to 5, in the final game yesterday, came home all square for the four with eight victories and as many defeats, but lost a game to its rivals, Philadelphia and New York.

The league leading Athletics wobbled a bit toward the end and finished with nine games won and seven lost after absorbing a 12 to 4 beating from Cleveland yesterday.

The New York Yankees, aided by Babe Ruth's 19th home run, finished their tour with a 13 to 1 triumph over Detroit. The Yanks won ten games and lost eight.

Tommy Thomas pitched Chicago to a final victory over Boston, holding the Red Sox to three hits while the pale hose won 2 to 0.

Robins Outfit But Win

In the National league, where a double header today between St. Louis and Philadelphia, winds up the eastern campaign, the Brooklyn Robins stood out as much as the Browns in their home stand. Out-hit 10-5 by Cincinnati yesterday, the Robins lunched three doubles for three runs and defeated the Reds 4 to 3.

Frank Hogan's home run and some expert fielding behind Fred Fitzsimmons enabled the Giants to reduce the St. Louis lead to 1½ games with a 3 to 2 victory. Hogan clouted his homer with two aboard in the fifth for all the Giant runs. The Chicago Cubs held their place three games behind the Giants by pulling out an eleven-inning game with the Phillies by a 2 to 1 count.

Heinie Meine of Pittsburgh turned in the best mound performance yesterday as he limited the Boston Braves to five hits to gain a 1 to 0 decision in a duel with Bruce Cunningham.

2-A Clubs Bunched In Battle For Top

CHICAGO, July 3.—A three-way tie for second place, a game and a half back of the leading Saints, and a two-way tie for fifth was the gnarled situation presented by the American Association today.

Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Louisville, desperately trying to un-track themselves before the Huddell Columbus and Toledo teams catch up with them, stayed close to St. Paul as a result of yesterday's ten-inning slugfest in which the Kansas City cellar club defeated the league-leaders 13 to 11.

Other games did even less to straighten out the tangled standings. Minneapolis climbed from fourth place into a tie for second by defeating Milwaukee, 6 to 3. Columbus won another from Louisville, 7 to 3, keeping the Colonels in the tie for second, and allowing the Red Birds to share fifth place with Toledo which split two games with Indianapolis.

St. Paul had the Kansas City game won, 9 to 4, at the start of the ninth, but the Blues rushed over seven runs.

Sportsman Stake Randall Feature

CLEVELAND, July 3.—Calumet Budlong, Calumet Brownie and J. E. Pavonian were favorites in the $1,500 sportsman stake, the feature race of the grand circuit program at North Randall today.

Calumet Budlong, from the stable of Jake Rodman, was a winner Monday, while Calumet Brownie tried out at 2:04 for the feature event. The Sportsman stake, in which ten horses were entered, has been raced continuously since 1920.

Supplementing it were a 2:22 trot with 13 entries, a 2:14 pace with 14, and a 2:21 pace with 14.

Taking all three heats, Calumet Alden, driven by Daniels, won the $1,500 Buckeye stake yesterday. The $1,000, 2:15 pace, with 13 entries went to Peter Nutonia, driven by Erskine. Peter Nutonia was second in the first two heats but finished ahead in the third and fourth. Parshall drove Norman Peter to win the $800 claiming trot, and Hollywood Chief, driven by Leese, took the $1,200 handicap trot.

Bell Net Favorite

ST. LOUIS, July 3.—Berkley Bell, of New York, wiry little Davis cup team aspirant and former University of Texas Ace, today ruled a strong favorite for the National Clay courts tennis championship as the tournament entered the semi-final round at the Triple A courts here.

Bell, who became the favorite by his easy 6-1, 6-3, 6-1 victory over George Jennings of Chicago, National public parks champion in the quarter-finals yesterday afternoon, was pitted against Ellsworth Vines, lanky California state champion in one of the semi-final matches today. In the other, Keith Gledhill, Santa Barbara, Cal., Intercollegiate champion, opposes Bruce Barnes, Austin, Texas.

Newcomers In Front At End Of Round But Old Favorites Are Picked To Lead At Finish

Early Pace Setters Play Good Golf, But None Are Expected To Break Traditions Of Big Show; 36-Hole Grind Scheduled for Saturday

By PAUL MICKELSON, Associated Press Sports Writer

TOLEDO, O., July 2.—Out in front of the National Open championship derby galloped a quartet of dark horses today but the "Twenty Grands" of golf were right behind them.

As the 72 hole chase for the most important stake of American golf charged toward the half-day post on the sun scorched Inverness course, the surprising pace setters go: the cheers but the favorites still received the solid backing.

New Leaders

The leaders, who blazed to the front with the only par 71 scores of the first 18 hole round yesterday, were Herman Barron, Port Chester, N. Y.; Mortie Dutra, Long Beach, Calif.; Charlie Guest, Deal, N. J., and Eddie Williams, of Cleveland, none of whom ever before caused any disturbance in National open struggles. All were fine golfers as their first round scores in the heat proved but none was expected to break the pretty well set traditions of the big show and keep ahead when the chase ends with the strenuous 36 hole fight Saturday. In the past 11 years only two golfers accomplished that feat and they were Bobby Jones and "Long Jim" Barnes.

Within the short space of but five strokes of the four leaders came 13 of the best shot makers in the game. One away was Al Espinosa of Chicago, who tied Bobby Jones in 1929 at Winged Foot and who carded the best round in the qualifying round of the open this year. Five others of international fame—Billie Burke of Greenwich, Conn., one of the big stars of America's 1031 Ryder cup team; Billy Davies and Fred Robson, two of England's best marksmen of the links; Joe Turnesa, of White Plains, N. Y., a dangerous rival in any tournament, and the ever reliable and steady

MacDonald Smith of New York, who finished second at Inverloch last year—were still very much in the fight with comfortable 73's.

Hagen, Sarazen In Race

Walter Hagen of Detroit and confident Gene Sarazen of New York, two of the heaviest played favorites, were in nice spots with 74's while the dangerous Tommy Armour of Detroit, Leo Liege of Agua Caliente, George Von Elm of Detroit and Big Ed Dudley of Wilmington, Del., could not be counted out because of their 75's.

Several others, thoroughly capable of helping to give the championship the wildest finish in its 35 years of play, were sandwiched with those 13. They were Henry Cluel, Bridgeport, Conn., 73; Frank Walsh, Chicago, 73; Tony Manero, Elmwood, N. Y., 74; Bobby Cruickshank, Purchase, N. Y., 71, and Al Watrous, Detroit, 74.

FILLING STATION & LUNCH STAND, $3,150

A wonderful location in Salem on main state highway, on large lot, 100x194. Building new, with lunch room, kitchen, bedroom, and three rooms can be finished on second floor. Very complete electric system, pressure air system, and city water. The owner is handling a good brand of gasoline and oil, and doing a good business with sandwiches and soft drinks, but has other interests, and will sacrifice for $3,150 for immediate sale.
